DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

At the community of Old Field stands a handsome frame chapel probably constructed in the 1890's. It consists of a rectangular structure with tower entrance on the corner of its facade so that the side of the church and tower are on the same plane. It is three bays deep and is constructed on brick piers and is covered with weatherboard. The rafter ends are exposed along the edge of the "A" roof. There is a chimney on each side of the structure. Each of the windows have miter arches, as well as the door. The principal window on the south gable wall adjacent the entrance is a three part composition with multifaceted window head. The tower has a double door with miter arch transom. Above the eave level is a shingle covered area with louvered bellfry. The whole square is capped with a spire on hip roof.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This chapel is a smaller and less sophisticated version of Chaplin Memorial Church on Taylor's Island, and the Methodist Church in Church Creek. The proportions of the steeple resemble the proportions of Lane M.E. Church, also on Taylor's Island. The chapel is a good late 19th century religious structure.
